Work...

WORK AND PLAY AT EAST HIGH

Upon entering the doors of East High school, one is immediately aware of the ever-present traditional school spirit which is reflected in the attitude of everyone connected with the functions of the institution. It is just this intangible spirit which is responsible for the splendid co-operation and success in the varied activities, such as competitive sports, P.T.A. work, and the many drives for the benefit of community welfare. This same spirit is responsible for the active way in which the students participate in both curricular and extra curricular activities. Many opportunities are offered to the wide-awake student who goes to school for the purpose of bettering himself mentally, physically, and socially. A varied curriculum is offered to suit the interests and abilities of every student, whether he be interested in English, History, Music, Art, Commercial Training, Manual Art, Science or Economics. Each department is headed by a friendly instructor who is always eager and willing to do his utmost toward helping the student in every way.

The student council, a very efficient form of student government made up of home room representatives, does its share toward making East High the well-organized educational establishment that it is.

By joining one or more of the various clubs sponsored by the teachers of East High, the students provide themselves with many hours of interesting study and entertainment. Through these organizations new friends are made, hobbies are developed, talents are discovered, interesting places are visited, and many forms of enjoyment are provided.

Lee-Zur hours, all-school parties, assemblies, football games, basketball games, and noon movies represent some of the ways in which the East students play.

All these things and many more make East High a place of combined work and play, a place long to be remembered by everyone.

A. D. 1941

Standing gaily with eager feet
Where books and pleasure meet,
Our seniors now the world survey,
Seeking the sun in skies of gray.

Though the outlook be dark and foreboding,
And the world seems on the verge of exploding,
In the midst of turmoil our seniors are gay.
Youth will ever find a way!

What though evil its forces flaunts?
The strength of youth nothing ever daunts.
It is good their spirits are strong,
For youth must wage the war with wrong.

From the portals of time the challenge rings;
Around the earth the answer wings:
Look out, world! The battle hasn't yet begun,
For here comes the class of '41!

—BARBARA HOOK.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST-MORTEM

By Lawrence Friedel

THE other evening when the fragrant smell of spring was in the air I threw open both windows in my room, sat down at my desk and propped my feet comfortably upon it. I made my first mistake when I opened those windows, for the screens were not yet up. I spied two pairs of small red eyes peering through the window. When the pair climbed upon the window sill, I saw that they were members of the species, Musca Domestica, quite common in this part of the country and more commonly called house-flies.

With a quick flutter of wings their steel blue bodies sailed past me and lit on top of the dresser, waiting for me to make the first move. They sat there for a full five minutes waiting for me to attack, but I would only fight a defensive battle. One of them soon tired of this dull life and began to cruise noisily about my chambers. As he rumbled past my ear, I distinctly heard a sneering chuckle.

It was bad enough for them to use my room for an airport but when they laughed at me, that was too much. I counted to ten while I looked for a suitable weapon. I rolled up a "Saturday Evening Post" and headed for my enemy. They seemed to have their battle well planned, for one attacked while the other sat leisurely on top of the dresser. My first blow was a savage over-hand swing; it didn't connect but it showed him that I was determined.

After twenty minutes of such tactics, I landed a beauty squarely upon his head. From the sound of it I believe I fractured his skull, or at least gave him a brain concussion severe enough to cause him to "Wrap the drapery of his couch about him and lie down to pleasant dreams." My second aggressor, seeing his partner lying senseless on the floor, began his part of the battle.

This fellow, though identical in structure to his deceased friend, fought a distinctly different battle. He seemed to prefer fighting at close quarters. He sat in the corner and let me take free shots at him. It wasn't until I got him on the open wall, above the bookcase, that I got a good swing at him. I let him have it square. I doubt if enough of him could be gathered together to hold a coroner's inquest.

Now that the dust has settled I wonder who really won. My opponents have passed on to a blissful sleep while I sit here weak and weary and doggone hot after a hard battle.

AS WE APPROACH GRADUATION

By Lois Wildey

AS we approach graduation, the seriousness of making our own way looms before us. We all will be concerned with adjusting ourselves to new situations. Comparatively few will be privileged to go to college, some other few will obtain jobs, and the others will be engaged in miscellaneous fields of activity. We cannot now realize what all these changes will involve, but it would be well for us to start looking at the future with some practical ideas in mind.

It is time we should come out of our air castles, under which we have not yet constructed foundations, and decide what we are to do with our lives in the way of really accomplishing something. All through school we have been given the impression that good characteristics, high morals, and clean living will be assets in molding our futures.

I do not doubt that there will be times of discouragement for each of us. But we will not fear these if we are building foundations of lasting value now. It is important that each person should find some field of activity about which he is enthusiastic, and in which he can forget 'himself in giving to that activity his whole-hearted support. But whatever we do, it is vital to successful and happy living to keep constantly before us high ideas and ideals of character and activity.

Prayer for Peace

By MARJORIE DE YOUNG

*Father above, whose heavenly hand
Guides all mankind on sea and land,
Hear now my prayer, though it may be
Humble and short, beseeching thee
To intervene in man's set ways
And take away the war-filled days,
The death, the sorrow, and the pain,*

*The screaming bullets and the rain
Of shells. Remove all hate and greed
And in their place, Lord, plant the seed
Of peace, honor, truth, love and joy
In each man's heart. Let him employ
These virtues to the common good
Of man's eternal brotherhood.*

IN THE YEAR 1940

By MARJORIE TERRELL

THE year was 1940. A small group of former classmates were thumbing through the pages of an old Quill. Found on page thirteen, of the old Quill of 1916, was an entry—Edith Hillary and Bill Cunningham, married April, 1916 . . . That was all that was written about them . . . popular couple . . . happy marriage . . . no one ever heard much about them again . . . in 1917 the United States entered the World War "to make the world safe for democracy" . . . "Didn't someone say that he was among the first to go?" . . . "He was a lieutenant or something" . . . How little they knew of their old classmates . . . How could they know? . . . Somewhere on the field of Flanders was a plain marker by the grave of a soldier, name unknown . . . Somewhere in the States there was a little woman, grown old before her time . . . grey hair . . . that eager, alert look of old, had faded from her care worn face . . . The group inspecting the old Quill turned the page . . .

The year was 1940—Greece and Italy had joined in the fray—the United States was drafting men for military training—And no one knows what lies in the future for the graduates of 1941.

THE FORFEIT

By GARRY CHINN

HEAVEN forbid that he must go through with it!—Why should he suffer like this for something of which he believed himself completely innocent? Thoughts of home, dear, sweet home where he could remember himself as being at peace, where friends and relatives so often congregated. How he longed to be there just once more! But no—that was yesterday: yesterday with dust of its today lying thick. So many things had happened since yesterday. It had happened—he didn't know how; squarely and assuredly the accusing finger had been pointed and now—

He found himself being directed by an attendant of this mansion of horrors towards his destination. Slowly, oh so slowly he raised himself up the long drawn gray steps. Click, click, click. His heels sent out their overbearing monotone of rhythm. Turning again he tried to walk with courage. What would the fellows back home in the old gang think if they knew what he was about to experience?

Looking down the long drawn hall he suddenly and with a trace of panic espied the room that would seal his fate. "Courage, old man, courage!" he said to himself.

The door was opened almost mechanically. Yes, this was the last! Why must all these people be here—of course, they were the witnesses of what was about to befall him.

Witnesses, spectators—what glory could they expect to see in his doom?

Another door opened, and a grim-faced person cloaked with the garment of his gruesome profession approached him. He was led into the little room beyond and directed towards that symbol of hatred to all American youth—the Chair! How often he had heard stories and rumors but never did it enter his mind that his own little realm of life would be threatened by the same.

Examinations, and answers were given and received, and he experienced the stealthy approach of the dreaded moment. Why couldn't his mother be here? The very moment of moments he wanted her beside him, but, no—he couldn't expect that. "Are you ready, my boy?" asked the one personifying the grim reaper. Before he could answer, the person continued. "It won't be long, it will only hurt a minute, and then be all over."

Yes, he was ready! Then the uniformed gentleman turned to the panel behind; he returned to place the straps upon the occupant's arms. All was finally ready—the dread moment had arrived.

The dentist then grabbed his forceps and pulled the pain-racked tooth amidst the cries of the boy.

Evening Prayer

By MARILYN MATHIS

*The sun is sinking in the west,
Now the time is come to rest.
Dear Lord, grant me sweet repose,
Forgotten may be my worry and woes.
Send to me sweet, heavenly dreams*

*In which thy fair face constantly beams;
Fill them with goodness and grace
To help me make this a better place.
Watch over and guard me through the night,
Until dawn comes brilliant and bright.*

FUTILITY OF WAR

By MIRIAM ENGLUND

*How foolish, men, to make your brothers bleed
For naught but selfish aims and earthly gain!
How foolish, men, that you should ever think
That war can bring one thing but grief and pain!
You spend a fortune on your
ships and guns;
And fight on to destroy all things worthwhile!
You care not for the pricelessness of souls!
You care not for a mother's grief and trial!
God gave you brains and body capable
To build a civilization
on this earth.
But you have torn all civilization
down
To give a hostile, hateful Hades birth!
When will you learn, you cruel and savage men?
And build a civilization
once again!
Will you just go on with your foolish game?
And keep on calling ruthless murder fame?
God grant that you will be TRUE
MEN once more,
And lend to brotherhood an open door!*

THE BIG GAME

By BARBARA HOOK

SHE was only a 10-B, but a slight, pretty, blond 10-B. You could tell at a glance that it was her first football game. Only her delicate, perplexed face was visible above the folded red and black blanket she held clasped in her arms. A cowbell jangled from one hand and a pennant was clasped in the other. Two long red and black streamers fluttered from her coat as she stood looking about anxiously for her friends. Her eyes lighted hopefully on the lanky boy engaged in throwing an apple core at the team, and she smiled wistfully.

The boy turned around at just that moment, and, seeing her smile, grinned an embarrassed, sheepish grin. "Oh, hello," he gulped, and turned a violent crimson. He was a tall, dark and, well, moderately good-looking senior. He scrambled hastily over the bleachers to where she stood and, turning an even deeper hue, said, "Always ready to help a damsel in distress—that's me. Lookin' for someone?"

"Oh, yes," she murmured. "It's a girl in a dark green coat with red hair."

"The coat?"

"No, silly, you know what I mean!" She giggled appreciatively.

"Well, I don't see any girls in green coats with red hair. The stadium's filling up pretty fast, too. Where were you going to meet her?"

"At the northwest entrance."

"Well, for Pete's sake, ain't that just like a woman! This is the northeast entrance."

"Oh, I'm sorry." It was her turn to blush now.

"You don't have time to change now. You probably wouldn't find her, anyway. The place is too full. We'd better get good seats while we can." She followed him down to the front.

Soon after the game had started, she began fussing with the blanket which she still held folded in her lap. When unfolded, it proved to be of mammoth dimensions. He gingerly wrapped her in it, and condescended to sit on a corner of it himself. Meanwhile the game had been making progress. "Oh, look," she said, "They've all fallen down in our end of the field."

"We're gonna score!" he yelled, leaping to his feet. "Touchdown! Touchdo-ow-wn! Oh darn it! Why did that have to happen?"

She had been regarding him with mild interest throughout this little exhibition. Now that he was seated again, she leaned over to ask him something. She was amazed to find him leaning violently in her direction. When she recoiled, she bumped into her neighbor on the other side. Looking about, she made the discovery that most of the grandstand was weaving back and forth. Then she saw the cheerleaders.

Suddenly her escort leaped to his feet again. "Oskey wow-wow!" he shouted. "Skinney-wow-wow!" "East Des Moines High School! Wow!" On the last "Wow" he landed on her foot. She looked up at him petulantly. He sat down beside her again.

The second quarter was observed in silence. They sat as far apart as the confines of the blanket allowed. At the half he bought a box of popcorn and presented it to her apologetically. She stood up and yelled with him after that.

During the second half they became quite chummy. By the beginning of the third quarter they had exchanged names, addresses, phone numbers, ages, probable occupations, schedules, and likes and dislikes in foods. Indeed, they scarcely noticed the beginning of the fourth quarter. By this time, too, she had decided that even the voluminous blanket was not ample protection against the cold, and he had put his arm around her.

In about the last five minutes of play, the game began to regain interest. "Touchdown! Touchdown! Touchdo-ow-wn!" he yelled again, this time from a sitting position. Then he leaped to his feet. "Yea, Team!" he shouted. She stood too, and remembering the cowbell and the pennant, she waved both for the first time in the game.

"Well, I'll see you Monday," said he.

"Good-bye, and thanks for the popcorn, and everything," said she. And in spite of the leave-taking, they left together.

Two middle-aged alumni left at the same time. "Makes you want to get back on the old gridiron," said the tall, stout alumnus. "Jack, you've missed all the sport, being up in the grandstand all the time."

"Oh, I don't know," said the short, thin alumnus, who had been watching the performance of our young couple more closely than the game, "there's a lot of sport up in the grandstand, too."

BARGAIN BASEMENTS

By Lawrence Friedel

I ONCE heard someone say, "Never form an opinion until you have some basic reason for doing so." Following this rule I feel justified in saying that no man can possibly save money in a bargain basement. I formed this conclusion after one bitter experience in "no man's land," namely, a bargain basement.

As I sat at breakfast, reading the paper one morning, I saw an ad, "socks, 5 pr. for a quarter." This seemed to me to be a big opportunity as I needed socks and was going downtown that morning anyway. So I bounded out in very good spirits for town.

Upon reaching my approximate destination I was caught in a swift-moving stream of women. They were marching four-abreast and two-deep, all headed for the enchanted basement of bargains. The next thing I knew I was in the basement although I don't remember going down the stairs. There wasn't a counter in sight, nothing but millions of shoving women. You could tell where the best bargains were by the volume of noise coming from that particular locality. Amongst the deafening roar, where the crowd was the thickest, lay the sock counter. I couldn't see the counter itself, only an occasional fragment of sock flying upward amidst hats, pocketbooks, and other feminine accessories.

With a grim determination I crouched forward and made a desperate plunge toward the midst of the foray. It was like running into a stone wall. Upon my third attempt I penetrated six feet into the crowd, being stopped by an elbow in the eye and a shoe, about size ten, digging savagely into my shin.

I know now why women carry umbrellas and pocketbooks; not as a protection against rain or a place to carry personal belongings, but as battle weapons. With an umbrella as a lance and a pocketbook wielded as a blackjack, they can display as roval a battle as any Roman gladiator.

After what seemed several hours, I reached the counter and presented a blond, gum-chewing clerk with a quarter. She picked three pairs of socks at random and stuffed them into a sack and sent me on my way. Halfway back through the crowd a woman (she weighed two-fifty if she weighed a pound) planted a heel on my toe and did an "about face." I was afraid to take off my shoe for fear of finding several toes missing. I plunged, shoved and crawled, finally reaching the door and fresh air. I felt like patting myself on the back, but both arms were too sore.

When I reached home I had two sore feet, a black eye, from some female's elbow, a torn shirt, and a pair of socks that I wouldn't wear in the day-time. I advise all male readers to take their scrimmage in football or some other "gentle" masculine sport and leave the bloody battlefields of bargain-basements to the women gladiators.

DISAPPOINTMENT AS I SEE IT

By Don Hammer

WHIFFS of wind flicked the dust from the smooth highway. The corn that stretched to the left and to the right of the road swayed its golden head—ever so slightly, seeming alternately to gasp for and expel the blistering air.

Far down where the shoulders of the road began to draw together a speck appeared. As it drew nearer the hum of tires and motor became distinguishable. From the shade of the corn field came a figure, who shuffled across the small gully and aimed the Iowa University sticker on his suit case at the oncomer.

His tired, appealing thumb began to drop as the speed of the auto refused to slacken. It whipped by and the traveler turned, shuffled across the gully to the shade of the corn fields—as whiffs of wind flicked the dust from the smooth, empty highway.

"You look sweet enough to eat."

He whispered soft and low.

"I am," she replied quite hungrily.

"Where do you want to go?"

A Day At East

A Picture Story by Marjorie DeYoung and Don Hammer

FROM the four corners of Lee Township students ride, walk, run and fly through rain, snow, fire, and flood for a day at East. And what a day! Two thousand, one hundred and twenty-one pupils eagerly climb the steps of the temple of knowledge each morning; books in their arms, a song in their hearts, a gnawing (mice, maybe) desire for learning in their soul, and cheese in their lunch!

That day, a typical one, is pictured on this page. Of course . . .

(1) . . . every day begins with the traditional turn about the first floor hall. Around and around they go and where they stop . . .

(2) . . . is in home room when the 8:50 A.M. bell rings. About once a week following home room . . .

(3) . . . students attend educational or entertaining assemblies, depending on their properties to educate or entertain, of course.

(4) . . . Chemistry class is shown here experimenting with one of . . .

(5) . . . those odors they make—so delightful to eat lunch in. Instead of a fork . . .

(6) . . . these students do a better job with their hands . . .

(7) . . . chasing a ball for one period provides exercise. Halls . . .

(8) . . . are zealously guarded by monitors during classes. "Pass Please?"

(9) . . . 5:15 all East's chillun rush home to spend rest of the "Day at Ease."

SCROLL

By BERNICE ROSENBERG

OUR school publication, the East High Scroll, plays a very prominent part in school affairs. Through the Scroll, students are informed of the various school activities, such as assemblies, all-school parties, LeeZur Hours, and of course, all the latest news about their classmates.

Few people realize and appreciate the large amount of work that goes into the publication of the Scroll. The Journalism Two class devotes a great deal of time and energy to make our paper as interesting as possible. But from this, they gain a great deal in the form of practical experience and actual enjoyment.

Probably very few of the students who are not taking journalism know exactly how a paper is written. First, each page must be laid out so as to present a pleasing and interesting appearance. After this has been done, the next step is to make a list of the articles and pictures which should be included. The page editors decide where each of these articles should be placed and how much space it may take. Each article is then assigned to a staff reporter, who writes it up. After the article is written, it is submitted to the copy-reader, who corrects it and makes such changes as are necessary. After the article has been carefully checked, it is typed for the printer.

East High School has reason to be proud of its newspaper, for it has won top ratings in the Columbia Press Association and also in the National Scholastic Press Association several times. It has been judged one of the best high school publications in the country for a number of years.

Even though the editor, the various page editors, the photographers, and the Scroll staff all deserve a large amount of praise, a good share of the credit should go to Mr. Stratton, the Scroll adviser. Mr. Stratton teaches the staff all they know about journalism and is partly responsible for the success of the Scroll.

DRUM MAJORS

DRUM MAJORS

AT East High we would not think of a marching band without drum majors. The boys who attended the football games of the 1940 season as drum majors were Robert Ringstrand, Eugene Groom, and Wilbur Miller. Their excellent poise and new tricks have earned for them the respect of the East High student body.

DANCE BAND

WITH the assistance of Mr. Peterson, a student teacher from Drake, seven members of the dance band, and their leader, Francis Wilcox, have furnished fine music for the many LeeZur Hours and all-school parties this semester.

The members are Joe Edwards, Kenneth Karr, DeVere Kever, saxophone; Corvin Champ, Frances Wilcox, trumpets; Darwin Rapp, Lee Galusha, trombone; Dick Case, drums; and Mr. Peterson, piano.

CHEERLEADERS

THE boys who deserve a lot of credit for leading the cheering section that Lee Township was noted for this fall, are Don Green; Eugene Scanland, captain; Tom Young and Dick Baldwin.

These boys worked very hard on new yells and tricks in order to make the student body more enthusiastic at the football and basketball games.

OFFICE ASSISTANTS

THE office assistants perform many small duties that give the office routine smoothness. In the main office, in the nurse's office and in Miss Helmsreich's office, before school, after school, and during their study hall period, the office assistants receive phone calls, deliver messages, give information and do numerous tasks.

Through this office-work is gained experience in meeting people, and the training that comes with the work of a business office. The office workers derive much enjoyment and pleasure from their valued work.

LIBRARY ASSISTANTS

HOW many times have you rushed into the library for a last minute report and asked a library assistant for the whereabouts of a certain book? In most cases the assistant is able to help you in using the library.

These boys and girls chosen by Miss Carrie Larson are trained to assist you in every way possible to take the fullest advantage of the facilities offered by our school library. The assistants have a great responsibility and are chosen for their ability to assume this responsibility.

TOUGH SCHEDULE

Hampered by injuries and a tough schedule. East High's football team was kept from a perfect season. Yet East D. M. kept an enviable record of 5 victories, 2 defeats and 1 tie. The two defeats were not disgraceful as East High's boys were in there fighting to the last second and the scores were of a close margin.

CANARIES

"Boy, those first team guys are rough!" say the Canaries.

And who would know better, for it is they who have to stand the attack of the varsity during practice, and it is they upon whom the spite of a defeat or the criticism of the coach is inflicted. Yes, the scrubs are the grindstone of the first team. They work hard all season playing a tough schedule of their own and still finding enough time to acquaint the varsity with the different systems and plays used by their opposition.

Although the Canaries do not receive the recognition that the first team does, we do not mean that they are not deserving of it, for on their schedule were second teams and reserves who were considered superior but who were taken or held in the stride of the East spirit.

Finishing the season undefeated the Canaries showed us that they can carry on next season as well as the varsity, and can carry the ball just as far if not farther than the teams of the past.

GIRLS' ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

THOUGH we never hear very much about the girls' sports and only too often think that the only chance they have for athletics is in physical education and outside of school, there is a very active Girls' Athletic Association in the school. This organization is open to all of the girls who wish to join and is under the supervision of Miss Helen Spencer, the girls' physical education director, and four officers elected by the girls. This year the officers are Mona Lee Mentzer, president; Helen Finch, vice-president; Edith Moore, secretary; and Charlotte Lorence, publicity secretary.

By participating in various sports after school, the girls may win monograms similar to those the boys earn. To win their monograms, the girls must participate in several sports, some of which are baseball, hiking, swimming, ice and roller skating, volley ball, ping pong, tennis, and bicycling. Upon earning 300 points a girl is eligible for a numeral; for 500 points she gets a monogram; and for additional points rings are added to the monogram.

G. A. A. girls have an opportunity to learn to referee games and act as officials in tournaments and gym classes. To do this they must become familiar with all the rules so that the girls cannot complain of unfair decisions.

The only inter-school sports are golf and tennis. These are spring sports, but the girls start practicing and familiarizing themselves with the rules in the fall. Any girl may go out for these sports whether she is in the G. A. A. or not.

Besides inter-school competition, there were two intramural tournaments this semester. The first was a kickpin tournament which was won by 304, Mrs. Pendency's home room.

The rules of kickpin are something like those of baseball, but pins are used for bases, and the ball is rolled rather than thrown. The runner has to make a complete circuit of the bases without knocking down a pin, while the defensive team tries to throw the ball around the bases past her and knock down the pin before she reaches it. If the runner knocks down a pin, it is an out. After three outs, the teams change.

The other tournament was a ping pong tournament held after the Extravaganza. While this was in progress there were also volley ball and swimming after school for all girls who wished to participate. Every girl is urged to take part in some kind of sport as the exercise improves the posture and aids the participant in walking gracefully.

KICKPIN CHAMPS

Years ago Artemus Ward was riding on a slow train on a branch railroad. While the conductor was punching his ticket, Artemus asked: "Does this railroad allow passengers to give advice if they do so in a respectful manner?"

"I guess so," growled the conductor.

"Well," Artemus went on, "it occurred to me that it would be well to detach the cowcatcher from in front of the engine and hitch it to the rear of the train, for we are not likely to overtake a cow, but what's to prevent a cow's strolling into this car and biting a passenger?"

"Only the good are really happy," says a New York columnist. Maybe, maybe, but the other guys seem to have a lot of fun, too.

Dick Baldwin had taken Kathleen Crawford to lunch. As they sat down she spoke to a nice-looking man at the next table.

"Is that man a friend of yours?" asked Dick.

"Yes," she replied.

"Well, why don't we ask him to join us?"

"Oh, Dick, this is so sudden!" cooed Kathleen.

"What's so sudden?" asked Dick.

"Why—why— he's our minister," she replied.
